You've read the tips, bought the planner, tried to just push through. Anxiety isn't a willpower problem — and you don't have to white-knuckle it alone.

✓ ERP & evidence-based treatment

✓ OCD & BFRB specialists

✓ Virtual & in-person

the basics

What is anxiety therapy?

Think of anxiety therapy as a structured, evidence-based way to understand how anxiety actually works — and how to change the patterns that keep it running the show.

It's focused on reducing avoidance, interrupting compulsions, and building practical tools so anxiety no longer runs your day. It's real, collaborative, and totally focused on you.

OUR PROCESS

What to expect, step by step

Getting to know you

We start by talking through what's going on and what led you here — your patterns, your triggers, and what you want to change. No pressure, no judgment.

Building your plan

Together we map a plan built around your brain and your life, drawing on CBT and ACT to shift the thoughts that keep anxiety going.

Facing it, gradually

Using ERP, we gently and deliberately reduce avoidance and compulsions — at a pace that feels manageable, never overwhelming.

Practicing in real life

Between sessions you'll build real skills: mindfulness, distress tolerance, and structured practice that reinforces your progress.

Staying steady

We check in, adjust what isn't working, and put relapse-prevention tools in place so you keep moving forward with confidence.
